Hi Richard,

What wonderful news re little Sadie Hannah! Many congratulations to you and your wife.

But gosh, how dreadful about the accident. No doubt you and your team are shell-shocked with the death of your colleague.

To help us figure out which Irish company you refer to, did you visit that facility on your trip in Sept 2013 or last May 2015? Did they produce fresh or processed salmon?

Kind regards,

Karen

Subject: Drainage System

Hi Karen,

I hope that you are doing well. I never thanked you for the live lobster and crab the last day of the Boston show. They were lovely! This has been a topsy-turvy period for myself and for Stavis. First- the good news. On March 19th my wife gave birth to a beautiful baby girl, Sadie Hannah. She was born at 6 lb., 10 oz. and is in great health. She has been a blessing! Unfortunately my paternity leave was cut short when we had an industrial accident on March 23rd in which our facility manager perished. Our main facility has been shuttered while we as well as government agencies thoroughly investigate the incident and decide how or whether to repair the facility and bring it back to full functionality. Thankfully we have a second, smaller plant that is quite close and we have been keeping much of our business going through that building. Additionally we had already agreed to the construction of a new plant that will replace this one; it will not be in operation until early 2018. Based on this we are evaluating a number of options to meet the needs of our company and our customers. The first year I went to Ireland we visited a plant that was processing Salmon. I believe that it was ISPG but I am not sure. In that plant if I remember correctly there was a unique drainage system. Instead of floor drains there were what looked like stanchions that were taking in the water on the floor and bringing it up and out of the room. That technology would be helpful to us should we decide to move into a facility that does not have floor drains. Could you possibly look into this for me and make the right introductions so I could learn more about the system? Thanks for your help.

Regards,

Rich
